SUGAR SELLING
11 POUNDS TO $1;
MEAT PRICES SAME

The promised 8-cent sugar has not yet reached Hawaii, the wholesale price quoted today being 8.35 a hundred. The same sugar sells at retail for 8.60, in hundred pound bags, small quantities being sold at 2 1/2 pounds for 25 cents, or 11 pounds to the dollar. Best white flour is being sold today at wholesale for $11.25 a barrel, 50-pound bags retailing at $2.95. Graham flour, in 5-pound bags, is quoted at 35 cents a bag wholesale, and 40 cents a bag retail.

Meat prices remain about the same, with an increase shown in bacon which now sells at 60 cents a pound, sliced. Antone Louis, proprietor of the Metropolitan, speaking of the price of mutton, said that leg o' mutton was always high because housekeepers were in the habit of demanding that cut always for a roast instead of the cheaper shoulder.

"Shoulder of mutton is always cheaper than the leg," said Mr. Louis. "This is not so much because the leg is better than the mutton—there is really very little difference in the quality of the two cuts. The difference in price is because housekeepers insist always upon having the leg of the sheep instead of the shoulder. If the ladies who do their own marketing, either personally or over the telephone, would like to save money on their mutton roast they can do so, at the rate of 13 cents a pound, by ordering shoulder o' mutton instead of leg. Our price today for leg o' mutton is 33 cents a pound; for shoulder, 20 cents a pound, and a clever cook could prepare it so it would be next to impossible to tell whether it was leg or shoulder."

In order to live up to the requirements of the food commission in regard to the sale of veal, Mr. Louis says the price of cutlets is high, being 35 cents a pound, and the food value of a pound of veal does not begin to equal that of a pound of steak.

Vegetables and fruits of the season are plentiful in the market now, and are being sold at prices very little higher than those which prevailed at this time last year. Housekeepers who remember their last year's prices can use them to compare with the following figures which were obtained today from Henry May & Company, Ltd. and the Metropolitan Market. WHAT U. S. SAVES

What the national food administration expects from the citizens of Hawaii, and what may be accomplished toward aiding the administration by earnest and faithful cooperation, is pointed out in the following despatch received last night by J. F. Child, federal food administrator for the territory, from Herbert Hoover, national food administrator:

"Statements appearing in the Chicago press and widely circulated from parties interested in exploiting the sale of meat protesting against meatless and wheatless days as unnecessary sacrifices by the American public are either malicious or emanate from personal interest obviously endeavoring to raise the price of meat."

"The results from meatless days, have for the first time created a sufficient visible supply of meat to allow us partially to comply with the demands we face and send overseas the quantities the Allies have asked us to ship in the month of December."

"It should be a matter of satisfaction to the entire American people that through their devotion in saving food and through their personal sacrifices the United States is enabled to meet this present demand. Our endeavors should in no instance be relaxed."

"The whole of the surplus of the 1917 harvest over and above the normal demands of our own population

May & Company are selling New Town Pippins at 4 pounds for a quarter, or $1.75 a box. These same apples sell at wholesale for $1.65 a box. A box contains four tiers of apples, about 40 pounds. These are the same apples which were selling for $1.55 retail during the early part of the week. The increase in price is due to cold storage charges which have to be paid on the apples.

for the period up to the time when the 1918 harvest will be gathered has already been shipped overseas. These shipments have been so heavy that it has been necessary for the food administration to restrict further exports of wheat so as to retain in the United States sufficient supplies to carry our own people until the next harvest.

"For these reasons all exports of wheat from now on until the next harvest are limited entirely to the volume of saving made by the American people in their consumption of wheat and wheat products. Every loaf saved in the household and every bushel will mean that by that much may exports to the Allies be increased in the period between now and the next harvest."

"We are continuing wheat shipments for December as far as our situation allows, but even with all the conservation that has been practiced, greater sacrifices should be made. Greater saving of food is the urgent present need, for with all grain made available through the saving of the nation the supply needed falls short and we are still unable to provide the 400,000 tons of foodstuffs for which the call has been sent and which are most urgently required by the Allies during the month of December."

"Statements calculated to spread the belief that meatless and wheatless days mean an unnecessary sacrifice and propaganda designed to hamper or check the saving of food are false and dangerous. Such statements given out for personal interest or profit are in little accord with the spirit being shown in millions of homes in the United States in which serious patriotic endeavor is being made to hold up the hands of the food administration in its task of feeding our soldiers abroad as well as our Allies and in the task of stabilizing prices to our own people."

"No more foolish or unpatriotic utterance could be made than to say that meatless and wheatless days are unnecessary at this time. In the critical situation of the world's food supply today opposition to the government's conservation measures is an action comparable only to opposition to the draft because any failure in saving food now means the direct and immediate loss of life and it means as well serious interference with our war service in the feeding of the Allies."
